

What is a Communications Emergency ?

A communications emergency exists when a critical communications system fails or is overloaded and puts the public at risk. Commercial communication systems are designed to handle “day-to-day” traffic, where there is no reserve capacity for handling a sudden and massive increase in communication volume that occurs during emergencies and disasters.